

Kentucky People

LOUISVILLE Top Ten Awards

RICHMOND EKU Business and Technology Center

CinTel Corp was honored as the distinguished technology company with 55 employees or less at the 2006 Greater Louisville Inc. Top Ten Awards, presented Oct. 13 at the Galt House in Louisville. Presented by TeN, a technology network in Greater Louisville, the awards recognize outstanding achievements in technology-intensive projects or initiatives. Sang-Don Kim is CEO of Louisville-based CinTel Corp.

Gov. Ernie Fletcher helped Eastern Kentucky University celebrate the grand opening of the first phase of its new Business and Technology Center. The 78,000-square-foot, $14 million facility, located on the south side of campus, features state-of-the-art business classrooms and labs, faculty and administrative offices and the outreach services of EKU's College of Business & Technology. Other speakers were EKU President Joanne Glasser and local state legislators Rep. Harry Moberly and Sen. Ed Worley.

SOMERSET Valley Oak Technology Complex

Local leaders join Fifth District Congressman Hal Rogers (R-Ky) in breaking ground on the 20,000-square-foot Enterprise Center at the Valley Oak Technology Complex in Somerset. The Enterprise Center is an initiative of the Southeast Kentucky Economic Development Corporation (SKED) using grant funds from the Small Business Administration. The facility is expected to be completed by September 2007. Pictured are (l-r): Shirlene Taylor, Cumberland's Workforce Network; J.P. Wiles, mayor of Somerset; Congressman Rogers; Greg Jones, SKED executive director; Lonnie Lawson, president and CEO of The Center for Rural Development; Mickey Ray, chairman of the Somerset-Pulaski County Development Foundation.