

Kentucky People

FRANKFORT

Governor's Awards in the Arts

GOVERNOR Ernie Fletcher recently presented the 2003 Governor's Awards in the Arts, honoring Kentucky individuals, businesses and organizations that have made outstanding contributions to the arts in Kentucky.

This year's recipients included:

- The Milner Award - Bill and Josephine D'Amato Richardson, Whitesburg
- The National Award - The Judd Family - Ashley, Naomi & Wynonna
- Artist Award - Arturo Alonzo Sandoval, Lexington
- Business Award - Community Trust Bank, Pikeville
- Community Arts Award - Montgomery County Council for the Arts, Mt. Sterling
- Education Award (Individual) - Vernell Bennett, Frankfort
- Education Award (Organization) - Kentucky Shakespeare Festival, Statewide
- Folk Heritage Award - Lestel Childress, Park City
- Government Award - City of Berea, Berea
- Media Award - Business First of Louisville, Louisville

Above: Governor Fletcher with actress Ashley Judd and her sister, singer Wynonna. The Judd family was presented with the National Award.

Right: Jean Hale, CEO of Community Trust Bank, accepts the Business Award.

Left: Tom Monahan, publisher of Business First of Louisville, which was the winner in the media category.

LEXINGTON

Ethical Leadership Institute

Above: Betty Chowning, CEO of CHA Health, and Lexington Herald-Leader Circulation Director Nelson Fonticiella, second from right, visited with afternoon speakers (from left) Alan MacDonald and Steve Elcessor, both of Frost Brown Todd, and Tony Carideo, president of The Carideo Group, Minneapolis.

Above: Ron James, right, president of the Center for Ethical Business Cultures (out of Minneapolis) visited with (from left) Norstan's Director of Human Resources Alan Perry, Georgetown College President Bill Crouch and conference coordinator Sally Schott.

Right: Sally Schott, Ethical Leadership Institute coordinator and Peer Exchange Network executive director, shared a laugh with John Pruitt, left, the COO of Lake Cumberland Regional Hospital, and Jack Keeney, executive director of Somerset/Pulaski County Chamber of Commerce.